Mark is a trial attorney who litigates in the areas of business and financial services, product liability, contracts, torts and employment law. A significant part of his practice is devoted to the defense of major manufacturers in product liability cases and commercial litigants in contract, fraud and securities litigation brought both in federal and state courts. He routinely represents clients in the defense of class action lawsuits including shareholder suits, product liability claims and consumer claims. He served as liaison counsel in multi-district litigation filed in Indianapolis and was actively involved in coordinating the defense of class action claims and over eight hundred personal injury and wrongful death claims.

Mark has advised clients on labor matters from negotiating collective bargaining agreements to obtaining judicial relief during a labor dispute. Mark has represented management in disputes regarding employment agreements, union representation petitions and unfair labor practice charges. He has handled matters before the National Labor Relations Board and private arbitrators.

Mark has extensive experience with employment contracts and restrictive covenants and has drafted such contracts from a litigation perspective and then enforced those contracts in state and federal courts. Mark also works with clients to draft many contracts used daily in commerce including supply agreements; joint development agreements; warranty documents; and, warning labels. While at the Firm, Mark served as Acting General Counsel for a national manufacturing concern. In that role, he was responsible for drafting contracts, leases and other commercial agreements, rendering advice on human resource issues and managing outside counsel in commercial litigation cases.

Mark currently serves as the Firm's General Counsel. He is an avid golfer, boater and antique car and boat fanatic.
